

ABSTRACT

A system and method for wireless local area network throughput enhancement includes an access point and an endpoint station in a wireless computer network transmitting data packets over radio frequency signals, and reordering the data packets into a megapacket in the access point using concatenation of the data packets. The method provides a significant throughput enhancement on wireless networks including IEEE 802.11 networks.